Practical and Theoretical Issues
Faculty of Education, University of British Columbia
Native Indian Teacher Education Program (NITEP) Bella Bella Field Centre
Winter Session 2 (January – April 2015)

Course Description

The course is intended to provide teacher candidates a context in which to examine and discuss the many facets of curriculum development and its implementation in/for the First Nations communities. For students in the Native Indian Teacher Education Program (NITEP) only.

The successful applicant should be knowledgeable about the inclusion of Aboriginal history, content and worldviews in the K-12 curriculum and/or have experience working in Aboriginal education. Persons of Aboriginal ancestry and/or who possess knowledge of the local community and language/culture (Heiltsuk) are preferred.

The course is taught in a small group format. Applicants must have a minimum of a bachelor's degree with at least 2 years teaching experience. A master's degree is preferred. Course instructor duties may include: teaching, holding regular office hours, marking assignments and exams, reporting grades and attending orientation meetings as well as follow-up sessions where applicable. Duties may also involve some or all of the following: preparation and involvement in seminars, lectures, discussion periods and tutorials; invigilation duties; and academic counseling of students during office hours.
